Global Test: 3

There are many types of shopping places in big cities. There are markets, shopping centres and department stores. Markets, including open-air markets selling fresh products such as fish vegetables, flowers, and antiques, usually open on specific days of the week. Shopping centres and department stores usually stay open all day through, seven days a week. They are usually more expensive than open-air markets.

In morocco, the more traditional stores are found in the older city neighbourhoods. There are a few streets in the old part of fez, for example, that do not have many shops. The basic shop there is the tiny grocery store. From this store local customers buy commodities like sugar' tea' oil' soap and lemonade. The large supermarkets appear in the suburbs further away from the city.
